Look At Me

I'd be fine if his eyes weren't blue.

Blue like the ocean, like drowning. Like he's all around me. Like needing to breathe, breathing without thinking, pulling him in.

Blue like the sky, like standing in an open field and staring infinity right in the face. Feeling small and insignificant, like no matter what I do it makes no difference. Like knowing any minute it could open up and swallow me and I would never see it coming.

His eyes are blue, drowning me, making me feel small, weak, worthless. They tell me I need him, I would die without him. They're right.
